As part of the proposed update to the integrated GPU APIs, Photoshop will replace its legacy 3D capabilities with a simpler interface for quickly creating and editing 3D content in a creative workflow. Designers will have the ability to “drag” 3D content into a project area to create 3D assets. Like 2D assets, 3D content will be “pinned” to a 2D layer and designers can edit its 2D properties and create volume for it. 3D content will be rendered at a fixed render size to provide designers with a consistent point of reference and work easier with the canvas. The proposed 3D workflow will provide Photoshop with smoother tooling for 2D and 3D content. Photoshop images can now be stored as “composites”, making it much easier to link a Photoshop image to a 3D asset. Photoshop’s modified layer content regions enable images to be quickly “pasted” into the 3D asset for re-use without losing any of the 2D image assets that are a part of the composite. Photoshop even allows 3D content to be added to the canvas with ease, providing designers the ability to create 3D assets that can be published, shared and edited with Photoshop at will. A major update to Local Adjustment Filter is that it is now available completely even in offline mode, so your work can be saved when you're offline in an editor like Premiere Pro. And, you can now save all your adjusted images for future reference. Say goodbye to the days of finding and recovering all those important files! And, we have new features to help you to work with your artboards. You can now start creating artwork with a new smart artboards feature tied directly to the sophisticated editing tools in Photoshop. This lets you easily navigate between complex artwork and take advantages of the many powerful new tools in Photoshop, while also maintaining control over your artboards with the new Artboard Controls panel in the Organizer.
